Feeling the call of God within him to devote himself to the benefit of that class of men amongst whom his own early life had been cast, he followed the openings God's providence made with the carefulness of a hunter on the track of game, never losing his purpose and never relaxing his effort until now he sees the desire of his heart accomplished and he is ready to fully enter into the call of his gracious Lord. If his erstwhile companions before the mast will carefully study this life and imitate it in the measure of their opportunity, how many a noble man will spring from the hard places of such service to the high and blessed places of such power for good as was his. CHAPTER X. WORK AMONG SEAMEN. And men who work can only work for men; And not to...
