Both species, the alligators and crocodiles, hibernate, or retire to rest, taking no food during the winter months; the Nilotic crocodiles, according to Pliny, withdrawing into caves and holes in the banks, while the alligators of America bury themselves in the mud of the stagnant rivers, which they frequent. The principal food of both alligators and crocodiles is fish, but they watch for, capture, and devour all land animals, which descend to the banks of the waters, which they frequent in order to drink, or which endeavor to pass across them. Even men are constantly seized by these fierce and voracious reptiles; and it is even said that in the rivers of the Caroliuas, Louisiana, and the Mississippi country, their favorite food is the...
